The Wager That Goes Too Far

Reader x Uncle Chen - Slow-burn Romance - Slice of Life - Comedy - Wuxia

The reader and Uncle Chen make a wager following a particularly heated argument. Out of sheer annoyance, Uncle Chen demands that whoever loses must obey the winner's instructions for an entire month.

Unfortunately the reader loses.

Initially, Uncle Chen uses this opportunity to make the reader's life miserable with impossibly annoying tasks like rearranging his garden daily because the feng shui changes from day to day and sorting the fresh tea leaves from a huge basket in a particularly order because it affects the taste of the tea. This man is insufferable and very good at enraging the reader.

The tasks start of being solo and gradually become tasks that both Uncle Chen and Reader are involved in, such as accompanying him on errands, sitting through his lectures, following his instructions during training.

I think one of the romantic turning points could be when the month ends, and Uncle Chen never asks the reader to leave. The wager should start as a battle of wills and end with both characters realizing that neither wants the arrangement to end. Ahhhhh

His Favourite Things

Reader x Uncle Chen - Playful Enemies to Lovers - Forced partnership - Wuxia - Romance

The reader is a wandering martial artist who repeatedly crosses paths with Uncle Chen during a jianghu mission. Unfortunately, the two have very different approaches to Jianghu and problem solving. Uncle Chen considers the reader too reckless and undisciplined, while the reader thinks he's arrogant and far too fond of giving unsolicited advice.

Their forced partnership, though temporary, does not quell their rivalry and dislike of one another; it becomes particularly ridiculous when the reader discovers Uncle Chen's favourite things, the special bottle of wine he cherishes and carries with him everywhere, the rare delicacies he enjoys eating and even his hot bubble baths that he must take once a day.

The reader deliberately tries think of ways to mess up his favourite things to irritate him out of sheer pettiness.

The idea is that the reader becomes his most favourite thing at the end of the story.

A Familiar Kind of Stranger

Reader x Uncle Chen - Isekai - Enemies to Lovers - Slow Burn - Wuxia - Romance - Comedy

An isekai adventure, inspired from A Dream Within A Dream C-drama!

The reader is an avid fan of the game, Where Winds Meet. One evening they fall asleep at their desk after a gruelling GvG match and awaken in unfamiliar surroundings. No longer in their bedroom, or wearing their pajamas...everything is different but also very familiar.

The reader is immediately thrust in to a chance encounter where they meet Uncle Jiang and Uncle Chen in a dangerous situation surrounded by enemies. The reader helps the pair without revealing who they are and what they know, and discovers they are quite a formidable martial artist themselves. In a panic, the reader tells them they are new to these lands and a wanderer looking for adventure.

Uncle Jiang and Uncle Chen are basically on their way to rescue someone who has been kidnapped (the twist will be that it will be the MC in your game, however you're not the MC in this world) and ask if you would aid them in their quest.

Uncle Jiang immediately takes to the reader, and is grateful for their help but Uncle Chen starts to notice some peculiar things about the reader and his distrust and jealousy grows.

The way the reader talks is different, how they reference certain things seem unsual. They occasionally demonstrate knowledge they shouldn't possess, like knowing Uncle Jiang's preferences with food and his taste in wines. Uncle Chen even notices some of reader's martial art style feels vaguely similar.

The more the reader tries to hide their identity and origins, the more tension grows between them and Uncle Chen. Cue intense fight scene, they end up falling down a ravine,

Uncle Chen gets injured and they have to spend a night together in some dingy cave (maybe Uncle Chen starts to grow some feelings towards the reader :)
